TEMPLE DEVELOPMENT COMPANY TAKES TOP INTERNATIONAL EMERGING MEDIA AWARD -- 2007 SUMMIT EMA

Sylvania, Ohio – December 5th, 2007 Temple Development Company is an award winner in the 2007 Summit Emerging Media Award (Summit EMA) competition for their marketing and development work with Gorillas & Gazelles. “We are very pleased to be recognized among the top marketing and development firms in the world with the receipt of this award” said Michael Temple, President of Temple Development Company. “There are so many talented developers out there that we are happy to be included among them, but we couldn’t have done it without our talented team and a fantastic client” added Mr. Temple.

The web development project for Gorillas & Gazelles included a full redesign of the site and also had an entire online assessment system built on a Microsoft SQL platform utilizing assessments and scoring methodology that is proprietary to Gorillas & Gazelles. “The project brings together the emerging practices of eBusiness with a well designed and user friendly web site” said Mr. Temple.

The Summit EMA competition is based on the premise that advertising is consistently at the forefront of the technological evolution of communication. During the 2007 event, judges analyzed submissions and selected merely 10% to receive the top spots. “Those involved in today’s emerging media technologies are the leaders who are establishing tomorrow’s avenues of advertising communications.” Said Jocelyn Luciano, Executive Director for the Summit International Awards (SIA). “Most communication professionals recognize that established avenues of communication can be reliable and safe. Developing and engaging in emerging media technologies, along with creative messaging and market awareness, is often a difficult criterion which makes earning a Summit EMA a significant achievement.”
